Abstract: This article is devoted to the study of borrowed words in English and were discussed some words that came into English from Latin language and Greek language.

Key words: a loanword, an ancient, to adapt, to borrow, object, to develop, to expand, to concern, an essential, meaningful.

Languages borrow words from one another. Sometimes, a language does not have all the words essential for its experiences. At such times, it has to borrow words from other languages. That borrowed words help in enhancing, expanding and developing the language. Usually, languages borrow words from another language when new object is developed for which the borrowing language has no word of its own. Despite the fact that English language is one of the most popular language in the world, it borrowed words and expressions from another languages mostly French, Latin and German. There are a lot of borrowed words in English that come many languages. Borrowed words also known as loanwords. A loanword or borrowing refers to the process of speakers adopting words from a source of language into their native language. Around 80% of the English language consists of words borrowed from other languages.

We can come across borrowed words in the works of writers. Borrowed words can be understood easily. Because they are used commonly in speech, books and other sources. They are as familiar to people as their own language words. They are as adapted as their words. For example: You will read some incredible stories from women just like you who have accomplished major feats by paying off debt and saving money [1:15]. In this sentence the word debt is borrowed word from Latin debitum"thing owed- keep something away from someone". Instead of the money that borrowed from anyone, the word "debt" is used. Another example: I have received a lot of about how good money management, saving, investing and building wealth is not just a women's thing [1:22]. In that sentence invest is borrowed from Italian "investine". It means "to spend money". Instead of that, the word invest is used.

There are a lot of words that came from Greek language and adopted to English. For example: If we break it down by demographics, the numbers are even worse[1:23]. In this sentence demography is come from two ancient Greek words demos(the people) and graphy(to write or to draw). So demography is concerned about writing, concerning the people. One more example: But wait a minute, what about things like retail therapy? [1:23]. Therapy comes from Greek and literally means "curing or healing". Instead of that, the word therapy is used. Another Geek word is "diploma" that is used commonly and familiar word for everyone. Specifically, diploma means"double folded paper". For example: When I finally earned my diploma in 1976-graduating with honors [3:2]. Its means like a document bearing record of graduation from or of a degree conferred by an education institute.

Usually, in financial books we find acquired words like:.debt, deposit, mortgage, cash, accountant and so on. All of these words are familiar to people that everyone thinks these words are not acquired. However, these words are borrowed too. For example: deposit: Particularly those that were built in the days before federal deposit insurance [2:26]. The word "deposit" is borrowed from Latin word "depositus" that means"put down". The next word is "mortgage" that comes from the Old French. Mortgage directly translates to "dead pledge": They work for the owners of their company, for the government paying taxes, and for the bank paying off a mortgage and credit cards [3:4]. In this sentence, mortgage gives the meaning: a legal agreement to borrow money from a bank or other financial organization, especially to buy a house or other property, or the amount of money borrowed. We also use the word "cash" in everyday life for money paid for goods or services at the time of purchase. Cash derives from the Middle French caisse-money box. For example: The demand for cash is enormous [3:4]. The word "accountant" is derived from The French word "compter" that means the job that helps businesses make critical financial decisions by collecting, tracking, and correcting the company's finances. For example: As a mother as well as an accountant, I have been concerned by the lack of financial education our children receive in school [3:3]. In this sentence accountant means a job.

Usually, in economics, the word "statistics" is used for the the science concerned with developing and studying methods for collecting, analyzing, interpreting and presenting empirical data. For example: I could go on and on with these factors, stating studies and statistics, but let's not get carried away [1:23]. This word is borrowed from German language.

There are a lot of words that came into English from Latin language. For example the word "innovative" borrowed from Latin and it means "to introduce something new": It was the sort of innovative policing strategies put into place in New York City [4:12].

In conclusion, there are a lot of acquired words in English and English language continues to expand its vocabulary by means of loanwords from another languages. I think, it is necessary to learn borrowed words for young linguists as they are future scientists of our century.
