Annotation: Nowadays, language learning is widespread among young people. At the same time, what facilities are there in language learning and how we can learn the language quickly and easily. We know that foreigners live in every country and go for a trip. If we know a language, we can communicate with them, as long as he can speak the language independently. There are several ways to learn English quickly and easily, and one of them is to watch different movies.

Key words: language learning, young people, facilities, quickly, easily, foreigners, communicate, independently and several ways.

Watching series on Netflix might not exactly improve your debating skills or formal register, but it helps you to understand the language better, get used to colloquial, conversational forms of English and implicitly get a feeling for the language. Also, you could try to pick out words that sound highly informal and look up their more scholarly counterparts. Of course, there is also a plethora of documentaries (try anything by David Attenborough to start you off) to be found online as well. Being exposed to a language for the length of a movie might help you to actually start thinking in English.

Since we started clicking and swiping our devices all day, we got the idea that everything can be taught, learned, and practiced without interaction. Want to gain a master's degree? Take an online course. Need a great recipe? Google it. Want to learn a foreign language? Choose an app. It's true that the internet can help language students bulk up their vocabulary and feel more confident in their abilities, but unless you plan on never uttering a word, forget it. You'll need to talk to native speakers – and as soon as possible. Now, before you back out of your overseas travel plans, do not worry. Talking to foreigners doesn't have to be scary or difficult. Try finding a language exchange partner in your city and chatting over coffee, for example, or commit to an online course.

Also, many language students dutifully write lists of new words in their notebooks, only to never use them in real life. While taking note of new words is a great habit, it is not enough on its own. As they say, use it or lose it. Next time, you hear a new word, don't just write it down: make an effort to use it as soon as possible in as many ways as possible. Say it, write it in a sentence, find its noun, verb or adjective form, and ask your native friends questions about it. This technique gives new vocabulary a living context and lets it stick in your mind faster! Day by day you should improve your skills. If you want to learn quickly and easily you must practice every minute. Set Specific Goals: Focus on learning specific, practical phrases you'll need in conversation rather than memorizing grammar rules. For instance, focus on greetings, asking for directions, or ordering food in a restaurant.

Start with children's books, comics, or easy articles. This will build your vocabulary and improve your reading skills.

Try to practice a little bit every day. Consistency is key to language learning, even if it's just 10-15 minutes a day.

By combining these methods, you'll quickly start gaining confidence and experience in the new language.

Pronunciation: immerse yourself in your target language as often as possible. This means listening to native speakers, reading books and articles in your chosen language, watching films and TV shows, and practicing speaking as much as possible.

Confidence: Many of my students have great confidence with their language learning and this helps them to learn even faster. If, however, you are not as self-assured, please read on as confidence can be developed by gaining some insights and gradually shifting your mindset.

In conclusion, gaining language experience quickly and easily requires immersion, consistent practice, and targeted learning. By surrounding yourself with the language, engaging in daily exercises, and focusing on practical communication, you can build proficiency effectively. Tools like language apps, flashcards, and conversation exchanges make the process more accessible and enjoyable. Ultimately, patience and a positive attitude are essential for long-term success in language acquisition.
