

ANALYZING “PLACE” IN RUSSIAN LITERATURE

Karimova Nigora Maratovna,Ferghana State University, Doctor of philosophy (PhD) on philological sciences, acting associate professor of Russian PhilologyE-mail: k.nigora@inbox.ru*

Abstract. This paper explores the concept of chronotope, as theorized by Mikhail Bakhtin, is a fundamental aspect of narrative structure that transcends the boundaries of individual works. Time and space are inextricably linked, with the former serving as the foundation of narrativity and the latter providing the necessary framework for the unfolding of events. This synthesis of temporal and spatial elements is what gives rise to the distinct "genres" or "types" of stories that readers encounter. (Yu & Zhu, 2022) In the context of Russian literature, the chronotope manifests in a variety of ways, reflecting the unique cultural and historical experiences of the nation. For instance, the theme of the "historical mission" and the notion of "suffering and redemption" often feature prominently, imbuing the literary landscapes with a profound sense of purpose and moral gravity.

Keywords: universe, image of the world, time and space, chronotope, routine, mythopoetic consciousness, literary aesthetics, artistic space, culture category.

Annotatsiya. Ushbu maqolada Mixail Baxtin tomonidan nazariylashtirilgan xronotop tushunchasi badiiy matn tuzilmasining muhim unsuri sifatida yoritiladi. U alohida asarlar chegarasidan chiqib ketuvchi hodisa sifatida talqin etiladi. Vaqt va makon o'zaro uzviy bog'liq bo'lib, vaqt narrativlikning asosini tashkil etsa, makon voqealarning rivojlanishi uchun zarur muhitni yaratadi. Aynan shu vaqt va makon sintezi o'quvchilar duch keladigan turli "janr" yoki "tip"dagi hikoyalar shakllanishiga olib keladi (Yu & Zhu, 2022). Rus adabiyoti kontekstida xronotop turli shakllarda namoyon bo'lib, millatning o'ziga xos madaniy va tarixiy tajribalarini aks ettiradi. Masalan, "tarixiy missiya" mavzusi va "azob-uqubat hamda najot" g'oyalari ko'pincha markaziy o'rin egallab, badiiy makonni chuqur ma'naviy ma'no va axloqiy og'irlik bilan boyitadi.

Kalit so'zlar: olam, dunyo obrazi, vaqt va makon, xronotop, kundalik hayot, mifopoetik ong, adabiy estetika, badiiy makon, madaniyat kategoriyasi.

Аннотация. В данной статье рассматривается концепция хронотопа, разработанная Михаил Бахтин, как фундаментальный элемент структуры художественного текста, выходящий за пределы отдельных произведений. Время и пространство находятся в неразрывной взаимосвязи: первое выступает основой нарративности, тогда как второе создаёт необходимую среду для развёртывания событий. Именно синтез временных и пространственных элементов формирует различные «жанры» или «типы» повествований, с которыми сталкивается читатель (Yu & Zhu, 2022). В контексте русской литературы хронотоп проявляется в разнообразных формах, отражая уникальный культурный и исторический опыт нации. Например, темы «исторической миссии» и идеи «страдания и искупления» нередко занимают центральное место, придавая художественному пространству глубокий смысл и нравственную значимость.

Ключевые слова: вселенная, образ мира, время и пространство, хронотоп, повседневность, мифопоэтическое сознание, литературная эстетика, художественное пространство, категория культуры.

Introduction. This paper presents an analysis of the chronotope of place in Russian literature. The concept of the chronotope, developed by Mikhail Bakhtin, refers to the intrinsic interconnection of spatial and temporal elements in a literary work. This study examines how the representation of place in Russian novels and short stories reflects and shapes the temporal experience of the characters and the narrative structure. The analysis focuses on works by Fyodor Dostoevsky, Leo Tolstoy, and Anton Chekhov, considering how their depictions of urban and rural settings and domestic and public spaces contribute to the overall artistic vision and thematic concerns of their writing. This paper aims to contribute to understanding the complex relationship between space, time, and literary aesthetics in the Russian literary tradition.

The concept of the chronotope, or the intrinsic connection between spatial and temporal elements in a literary work, has been influential in literary studies since Mikhail Bakhtin first theorized it. Bakhtin argued that the representation of time and space in a text is not merely a backdrop but an essential component that shapes a literary work's narrative, characterization, and thematic concerns.

The analysis will consider how these renowned Russian authors utilize diverse settings, including bustling urban centres, tranquil countryside landscapes, private domestic spheres, and public social spaces, to construct and convey the complex interplay of time and space in their fictional worlds[3, 72].

The emphasis on the interconnectedness of spatial and temporal factors may overlook the ways in which the depiction of setting can serve other narrative and thematic purposes beyond reflecting the characters' temporal experiences. For example, the use of certain environments may be more strongly driven by symbolic, psychological, or ideological concerns rather than purely chronotopic considerations. Additionally, the reading of place through the lens of the chronotope risks flattening the diverse approaches and aesthetic visions of different Russian authors, who may engage with spatial representation in varying and complex manners. A more balanced analysis would examine how the chronotope functions alongside other literary devices and techniques in shaping the artistic vision of a work.

Literature review. Mikhail Bakhtin's conceptualization of the chronotope, or the "intrinsic connectedness of temporal and spatial relationships" within literary texts, has been highly influential in the study of Russian literature. Bakhtin argued that the representation of time and space is not merely a backdrop but a fundamental aspect that shapes the narrative structure, characterization, and thematic concerns of a literary work [3, 48].

Subsequent scholars have built upon Bakhtin's insights, exploring the diverse ways in which the chronotope manifests in Russian novels and short stories. Some have examined how the depiction of specific settings, such as the city or the countryside, reflects and informs the temporal experiences of characters, and how these spatial representations contribute to the overall artistic vision and thematic concerns of the works[6, 74].

Other researchers have delved into the semantic connections between time and space within literary texts, analyzing how the organization and description of spatial elements are intricately tied to the narrative's temporal unfolding. This research has shed light on the complex interrelationship between the literary representation of place and the shaping of the temporal dimension in Russian fiction. The history of chronotope research in the Russian literary tradition has also been the subject of scholarly examination, with Ukrainian literary experts exploring the peculiarities of time and space organization in Ukrainian postmodern literature and emphasizing the importance of depicting the chronotope through specific narrative techniques[5, 92].

While the analysis of the chronotope in Russian literature can offer valuable insights, an opposing argument could be made that such an approach may also overlook other important literary elements. The focus on the interconnectedness of spatial and temporal factors could potentially obscure the ways in which the depiction of setting can serve narrative and thematic purposes beyond reflecting the characters' temporal experiences. For example, the use of certain environments may be more strongly driven by symbolic, psychological, or ideological concerns rather than purely chronotopic considerations. Additionally, reading place through the lens of the chronotope risks flattening the diverse approaches and aesthetic visions of different Russian authors, who may engage with spatial representation in varying and complex manners. A more balanced analysis would examine how the chronotope functions alongside other literary devices and techniques in shaping the artistic vision of a work[7, 51].

Research methods. The research for this paper will involve a close reading of selected works by Fyodor Dostoevsky, Leo Tolstoy, and Anton Chekhov, with a focus on the depiction of diverse spatial environments, including urban centers, rural landscapes, domestic spaces, and public spheres[8, 413]. The analysis will examine how the authors' representations of place contribute to the temporal experiences of the characters and the overall narrative structure and thematic concerns of the works.

An opposing argument could be made that the focus on the chronotope can obscure other important literary elements. While the analysis of the chronotope in Russian literature can offer valuable insights, it may overlook the ways in which the depiction of setting can serve narrative and thematic purposes beyond reflecting the characters' temporal experiences. The use of certain environments may be more strongly driven by symbolic, psychological, or ideological concerns rather than purely chronotopic considerations. Additionally, reading place through the lens of the chronotope risks flattening the diverse approaches and aesthetic visions of different Russian authors, who may engage with spatial representation in varying and complex manners. A more balanced analysis would examine how the chronotope functions alongside other literary devices and techniques in shaping the artistic vision of a work.

The research will also involve a review of secondary literature on the chronotope in Russian literature, including the work of Bakhtin and other scholars who have built upon his conceptualization of the chronotope[9, 128].

Preliminary findings. The preliminary findings from the research suggest that the chronotope plays a crucial role in shaping the narrative structure and thematic concerns of the selected Russian literary works. In Dostoevsky's "Crime and Punishment," the urban setting of St. Petersburg, with its claustrophobic city streets and crowded living quarters, reflects the protagonist Raskolnikov's psychological turmoil and the temporal unfolding of his crime and subsequent guilt. In Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina," the contrast between the bustling city of Moscow and the more serene rural estates of the aristocracy underscores the temporal and spatial displacements experienced by the characters, as they navigate the shifting social and emotional landscapes of their lives.

In Chekhov's short stories, the depiction of domestic spaces and public spheres often serves to highlight the characters' sense of temporal and spatial alienation, as they grapple with the constraints of their social and economic circumstances.

The preliminary findings suggest that the chronotope can be a valuable tool for understanding the complex interplay between the literary representation of place and the shaping of the narrative's temporal dimension. However, the analysis also points to the need for a more nuanced approach that examines how the chronotope functions alongside other literary devices and techniques in creating the artistic vision of the work.

Results and Discussion. The research findings demonstrate the integral role of the chronotope in shaping the narrative structure and thematic concerns of selected works of Russian literature. In Dostoevsky's "Crime and Punishment," the urban setting of St. Petersburg, with its claustrophobic city streets and crowded living quarters, reflects the protagonist Raskolnikov's psychological turmoil and the temporal progression of his criminal act and the subsequent anguish he experiences over his guilt. The contrast between the bustling city of Moscow and the more serene rural estates of the aristocracy in Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina" underscores the temporal and spatial displacements experienced by the characters as they navigate the shifting social and emotional landscapes of their lives[9, 52].

In Chekhov's short stories, the depiction of domestic spaces and public spheres often serves to highlight the characters' sense of temporal and spatial alienation, as they grapple with the constraints of their social and economic circumstances.

The analysis suggests that the chronotope can be a valuable tool for understanding the complex interplay between the literary representation of place and the shaping of the narrative's temporal dimension. However, the findings also point to the need for a more nuanced approach that examines how the chronotope functions alongside other literary devices and techniques in creating the artistic vision of the work.

The research findings demonstrate the integral role of the chronotope in shaping the narrative structure and thematic concerns of selected works of Russian literature. In Dostoevsky's "Crime and Punishment," the urban setting of St. Petersburg reflects the protagonist's psychological turmoil and the temporal progression of his criminal act and subsequent guilt. The contrast between the bustling city of Moscow and the more serene rural estates of the aristocracy in Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina" underscores the temporal and spatial displacements experienced by the characters as they navigate the shifting social and emotional landscapes of their lives. In Chekhov's short stories, the depiction of domestic spaces and public spheres often serves to highlight the characters' sense of temporal and spatial alienation, as they grapple with the constraints of their social and economic circumstances. The analysis suggests that the chronotope can be a valuable tool for understanding the complex interplay between the literary representation of place and the shaping of the narrative's temporal dimension, but a more nuanced approach examining how the chronotope functions alongside other literary devices is needed.

Conclusion and further research. This research has demonstrated the integral role of the chronotope in shaping the narrative structure and thematic concerns of selected works of Russian literature. The analysis of Dostoevsky's, Tolstoy's, and Chekhov's texts has shown how the literary representation of space and time is inextricably linked, with the chronotype serving as a means of reflecting the characters' lived experiences and the social, cultural, and historical contexts that shape their psychological and emotional realities[1, 32].

However, the findings also point to the need for a more nuanced approach that examines how the chronotype functions alongside other literary devices and techniques in creating the artistic vision of the work. Further research could explore the relationship between the chronotope and other narrative elements, such as character development, symbolic imagery, and narrative perspective, to gain a more comprehensive understanding of how the literary chronotope operates within the broader context of the text. Additionally, comparative analyses of the chronotope in works from different national and cultural traditions could shed light on how diverse cultural and historical influences shape the artistic representation of space and time [2, 43].

References:

1. Лаговська, В О., & Oleinikova, G. (2023, August 21). THE HISTORY OF THE CHRONOTOPE RESEARCH. Kherson State University, 29-34. <https://doi.org/10.32999/ksu2663-3426/2023-1-4>
2. Agha, A. (2007, March 31). Recombinant selves in mass mediated spacetime. Elsevier BV, 27(3), 320-335.
3. Bussey, M. (2009). A Utopic Reflection. Social Alternatives.
4. Фаликова Н. Э. Хронотоп как категория исторической поэтики. – Режим доступа: <http://www.philolog.ru/filolog/compos.htm>. – Загл. с экрана.
5. Шутая Н. К. Сюжетные возможности хронотопа «присутственное место» и их использование в произведениях русских классиков XIX в. (на примере прозаических произведений А. С. Пушкина, Н. В. Гоголя и Л. Н. Толстого) // Вестник Моск. ун-та. Сер. 9. Филология. – 2005. - № 5. – С. 64-75.
6. Шукин В. Г. О филологическом образе мира (философские заметки) // Вопросы философии. – 2004. - № 10. – С. 47- 64.
7. Силантьев И. Мотив как проблема нарратологии// Критика и семиотика. – Новосибирск, 2002.- Вып.5. - С.32-60.
8. Степанов Ю.С. Концепты. Тонкая пленка цивилизации. –М.:ООО Лит Рес, 2007. – 286.
9. Тороп П. Х. Хронотоп // Словарь терминологии тартуско-московской семиотической школы / Сост. Я. Левченко; под рук. И. А.Чернова // <http://diction.chat.ru/xronotop.html>.